WITH SITTING BULL.

How the Sioux Chief Travelled as a Star.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

Manager Kelly Tells How Custer's Murderer Begun and Ended His Engagement.

"Yes, I've had some rare experiences during the time I've been managing stars," said W. W. Kelly, the veteran manager of Grace Hawthorne in the U. P. office yesterday, "and I didn't know that I would care about changing them. I suppose, no man ever made money faster in theatricals, and no man ever more confidently thought he was going to keep on making it, than I did during the nine weeks that I managed Sitting Bull. You see from the time when (after having massacred Custer and all his command, and escaped over into Canada) he was returned to the Standing Rock agency in Dakota—a thousand agents were on his track with the sole view of making money out of him by travelling him around as a show; but until I made the application, no one had been successful in getting the old man to leave the Reservation. But I finally obtained the consent of the agent, Mr. McLaughlin, and we started off on our starring tour. Sitting Bull received a percentage of the profits, and all his autograph money besides, and he sold his autographs as fast as he could write them at a dollar a-piece. He grieved considerably at having to leave two of his wives behind, for we only allowed him to take one out of the three. His sister, however, a sharp old woman, his niece, as pretty a girl as I ever saw, and the nine members of his staff, whom he used as a cabinet, including Long Dog, his confidential adviser, an Indian eighty-one years old, were all in the company and made up the troupe. The programme was to have speeches in the Indian tongue, oratory, songs, etc.; an interpreter would translate what had been said for the edification of the audience. We opened in New York, at the Eden Musee, and in the three weeks we played there, took in $30,820. Captain Williams wanted to prevent us from playing on Sunday, and as that was the big day, I was not a little discomfited. A brilliant idea struck me, however, when it occurred to me that the law of New York tolerates sacred concerts on the Sabbath. So I boldly billed a 'Sitting Bull Sacred Concert' and for three Sundays had two and three thousand dollar houses. The Captain smiled and said something with reference to gall but he did not interfere. I forgot to say that our trip east had been marred by a little incident at St. Paul. That being somewhat near the scene of the Custer massacre than New York, public feeling differed a little, you know, and one night as the old gent and I were coming out of a theatre, some one fired a pistol at him. The bullet whizzed past us both, and I thought I was killed sure. Sitting Bull only looked a little astonished, however, and before the fellow had time to fire another shot, he was rescued. We had forgotten all about this, however, in the face of our New York success, and we crossed over to Philadelphia jubilant. I had been unable to procure any hall in the city, except that owned by the Y. M. C. A., and here we were to open on Monday night. We arrived Saturday, and at the hotel I found awaiting me a note from the editor of the News, a man whom I knew well. It ran: 'Dear Kelly: If you will send down a photograph of Sitting Bull at once, I will give you a prominent space in the Sunday issue of our paper.' You can imagine that I lost no time in getting that photo down to the News. They had a cut made from it, and next morning Sitting Bull's photo covered half of the front page. But imagine my horror at what accompanied it. There were all fat letters and exclamations: points with out number denouncing him, damning him, numbering the crimes he had committed, charging him with disembodying the horrors of the Custer massacre, and calling upon the citizens of Philadelphia not only not to patronize the monster, but to assemble and hang him or drag him through the streets. They had given me a prominent place in their paper with a vengeance! As soon as I had recovered from my dizziness, I was handed a note from the Y. M. C. A. Association, informing me that I could not have their hall. As soon as I had soberly thought over that news, came that some citizen had fired another pistol at me. Well, we got out of Philadelphia safe, but without making a dollar. The papers everywhere had then taken the matter up, and we were a dead failure in Brooklyn, the next place we showed. Then the Democratic papers began to take up the theme and howl about the Administration which allowed Sitting Bull to leave his Reservation for the purpose of making money for a showman. I was then in the heat of the election last fall and the department ordered Sitting Bull back to his agency in a hurry. In the start, every son of a gun in the department of the Interior wanted to go in on the profits. I wished afterwards that I had taken everyone of them in."

The Injuns, of course, created a good deal of gossip at every hotel we took them to. In a big hotel dining room, one day, the first they had entered, they all sat down to the table, and all looked puzzled to know what the napkin was for. Sitting Bull made no move till he saw Long Dog get gravely up, unfold the napkin, spread it on his chair, and sit down upon it. He then followed suit, and to the amusement of the hotel folks every individual Injun did the same.

Sitting Bull is now again off his reservation. Mr. Kelly states that he is traveling with Buffalo, Bill's Wild West Combination. This is a show in which a brood of real Indians are employed, and Sitting Bull fills the role of the Big Chief, the Redskin Marauder.

IOLANTHE.

The Coming Production of Gilbert & Sullivan's Masterpiece.

The cast and choruses of Iolanthe have now been completed, and the first general full rehearsal of the entire company occurs in Calder's Music Palace to-morrow evening. There is wit and satire in almost every line of Iolanthe from beginning to end. It never weakens or swerves from its purpose—it is comprehensive and unique, touching on all the sore points possible. Although it has been produced here before, a few words concerning the beautiful work of Gilbert & Sullivan will not be uninteresting to Hazzard readers this morning. As the curtain rises the picture is a brilliant one. The stage is well filled with varieties in beautiful costumes and positions, and a beautiful chorus is sung by the ladies.

Tripping lightly, tripping lightly. Nobody knows why or whether.

The chorus here shows proof of delicate and admirable treatment. Iolanthe then rises from the water in "attired garments, singing in a very suppliant manner, and then receives a pardon, and the refrains entrancing for its simplicity. The character of Phyllis is very appropriately handled, and the duet between Phyllis and Strephon is one of the finest musical gems from the pen of Mr. Sullivan. The Queen is portrayed in exactness with the same effect as that of other thorough fittings throughout the opera. The first act ends with a powerful ensemble between Phyllis, Queen, Iolanthe, Cella, Leila, Flats, Lord Chancellor, Lord Mount Arrarat, Lord Toller, and chorus, with orchestra and brass band, with a wonderful and impressive effect.

The Lord Chancellor comes on the scene in the first act, and at once establishes himself as the male character of the opera. His feelings are expressed by the most exaggerated ideas of eccentricity; his make up, antics and general bearing are so unique that they excite universal mirth.

There are many delightful points cannot be mentioned as it takes the musical portion for illustrating the general treatment.

The cast of characters is distributed as follows:

Phyllis (an Arcadian shepherdess) Mrs. Jos. Siegel
Queen Mrs. J. A. Levey
Iolanthe Miss Jeanie Hawley
Cella Miss Edna Russell
Leila Miss Alice Donaldson
Flats Miss Kate Young
Lord Chancellor Jas. D. McNulty
Lord Mount Arrarat J. C. Crawford
Lord Toller Ed. Edmonds
Strephon (an Arcadian shepherd) J. B. Bunker
Sentry Willard Smith
Attendant Wm. Calder
Lords, Bishops, Counts, etc.

The costumes will be selected with the greatest care and the department thereof will be under the supervision of a very competent and careful committee. The stage property and fittings will also be elaborate and the greatest of all will be a mechanical transformation scene showing the complete wonders of fairy land. If possible, "Iolanthe" will be produced on Thanksgiving day and evening.

A personal of the cast will convince our readers that the opera of "Iolanthe" is in the hands of some of the best musical talent in the city, and being under the direction of Prof. H. S. Krouse, musical conductor, to whom was due most of the success of "Patience," which so pleased and enchanted the public last winter, is sure to be a magnificent and pleasing performance. Prof. Krouse is heart and soul in the work and says that he intends to make the production of "Iolanthe" the coming musical event.

FREE ONCE MORE.

Judge Zane Grants Miss Starkey Another Release.

The case of Elizabeth Starkey, whose re-arrest THE HERALD chronicled yesterday, came up before Commissioner McKay yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, when the lady made application for discharge, claiming that she had served the necessary thirty days, and was willing to pay the fine.

Marshal Ireland was sworn, and testified to the imprisonment.

Mr. Kirkpatrick then stated that it had been impossible for Miss Starkey to apply for release before she would have done so, and argued further in favor of her being discharged from custody.

Mr. McKay objected, and said the lady could have answered the questions of the Grand Jury and been purged of the contempt before the District Court. He held, therefore, that she was entitled to discharge on the first commitment, but as the second did not go into effect until after the first had expired, he therefore refused to grant the desired release, and remanded the prisoner to the custody of the Marshal.

Mr. Kirkpatrick applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and the case was set for 2 p.m. before Judge Zane.

At 2 p.m. Mr. Kirkpatrick, Mr. Varian, Miss Starkey and the reporters were the only persons in chambers, and the arguments, which were lengthy, were submitted by Kirkpatrick and Varian, and at the close of the appeals Mr. Varian left to hunt up more authorities, saying he would be back if he found any. Shortly after Mr. Kirkpatrick left, and Judge Zane pored over a law book until his return. After a rather protracted consultation, Judge Zane announced his decision, which released Miss Starkey from imprisonment, and she was once again set free.

Whether it will prove to be merely another success will be readily apparent.

ON THE SALT SEA SHORE.

How the Orphans Enjoyed Their Recent Out.

The excursion tendered to the orphans, fatherless, motherless and friendless children of this city was an entire success. About 350 children, embracing the above classes, as well as the bootblacks and newsboys, left at the usual hour for a few sunny moments on the borders of our inland sea. The clouds looked dark and lowering, and prospects for rain threatening; but one of the weatherwise of the hard working committee said that they had fixed the weather for the day, and it would be fine—sure enough it was so. The day proved bright and beautiful. Old Sol never smiled for a happier or jollier crowd than the one that had been stowed away so carefully in the cars. Members of the committee were by the hour, ready to watch their charges en route, and in due time, without accident, they arrived at Garfield.

The eastern bath-houses were tendered by Captain Douris to the children, and but a few moments elapsed before the darlings were shouting and dashing in the briny. The Caledonian band, headed by W. C. Dumbear, played delightful airs for the entertainment of all. In the meantime the for-midable lemonade barrels were being filled and got ready for the youngsters when leaving the lake. We tasted the article; it was a No. 1, fit for any orphan old or young. Here the ladies came in to play their part in the distribution. Then the sandwiches, cakes and fruit were handed around. Then followed the trips on the lake on the Sonic Rider. Then music by the band, presided over by Prof. Krouse, dancing and all sorts of fun followed, but all of it free to the juveniles. Such a windfall is not often the lot of little waifs that lack the kind words of a father or mother to enable them to bathe with the world.

Then the generous-hearted Nelse Empey got the boys and girls in rows. The committee were about to present each with a present. The bootblacks and newsboys were called out and each presented with a pocket-knife. Then the boys who worked to help support their widowed mothers were alike given a present.

But when the call was made by C. R. Savage for a show of hands on the part of boys who did not smoke, every boy responded. This of course was taken as a joke by the committee, and a fine was levied. Some four had been felt for, but he covered second base in an admirable manner. On the other side the pitching of Wells was the finest feature; Boyle made a magnificent one hand catch in center and drew forth the heartiest applause of the day. Parsons played up to his usual standard, though Allen's delivery put him at a great disadvantage; Douris created an excellent impression on first, and the prevailing notion throughout was that Ogden would have had Wells started in at the box. The errors were not numerous on either side, but the scorer failed to note them.

To the credit of the excursionists it can be said that very few were guilty of infractions of the rules imposed upon them. They were as orderly and respectful as any body's boys or girls. The train arrived at the city without accident of any kind, and 350 children were happier for the day's outing. This ends the efforts of the Old Folks Committee for this season.

"We are $2.50 ahead on both the excursions this year," said the Treasurer.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

Salt Lake Turns Out a Daisy Nine.

OGDEN RETURNS IN MOURNING.

A Score of 9 to 5—A Willard Game—Race Talk—Romero—Tibbitts—General News.

That the public is still ready to flock to a game of base ball when it can be assured that there will be no trifling, and that the nines will be somewhere evenly matched, was evinced yesterday when a crowd of 600 people paid admission to the grounds to witness the contest between the Ogden and Salt Lake 200 or 300 chameleons headbends besides rooted in the trees and peered over the fences. Both nines were apparently in the best of form, and the Salt Lakeers, particularly, when they took the field were benighted on as being the strongest home team turned out at a game for many a day past. The sight of Barker, Marlow and Bess playing together recalled the days of the old Reds and Deacons, and many were the reminiscences exchanged by the old standbys of the grand stand.

Ogden lost the game in the first three innings solely by the frightful pitching and throwing of Allen, who was under such a dense cloud, that it was not for the memory of his old record, he would almost have been hived. At the end of the third inning Salt Lake had made 8 to Ogden's 2. Wells, the Willard pitcher, was then substituted, and in the six innings that followed, Salt Lake gained but one run. Had Wells gone in at the start, we believe the result would have been vastly different. Ogden's batting was poor, and the Colorado song and dance act he picked up seemed to disconcert the batsmen considerably. Larson played with his even excellence, and made some fine stops of a number of wretched balls thrown him; Ridges caught well, but was not free from the imputation of sloppiness; Kelly Golding made a fine double play in center by taking in a fly, and putting the ball in lively style to Burt, but he covered second base in an admirable manner.

On the other side the pitching of Wells was the finest feature; Boyle made a magnificent one hand catch in center and drew forth the heartiest applause of the day. Parsons played up to his usual standard, though Allen's delivery put him at a great disadvantage; Douris created an excellent impression on first, and the prevailing notion throughout was that Ogden would have had Wells started in at the box. The errors were not numerous on either side, but the scorer failed to note them.

The receipts were $125. The expenses including $50 paid to the Ogden, were about $90, so that for the first time in many months, there will be something to divide among the boys. The $350 wager was put up by the Kierse club; the money was placed in the hands of J. D. Spencer of Spencer & Kimball before the game, and the $100 promptly handed over to West at the conclusion.

Barker got but little to do and did that little well.

Barlow made some nasty throws to Larson, but the doughty first baseman was good for every one of them.

The diamond was in fine condition; the police regulations were first-class, and nothing was lacking to make an enjoyable game. But what is to prevent the police from abolishing the fence and tree dead head snags as they do in Colorado? What is the dice once between a man who sneaks a view of a baseball game and one who tries to sneak into a theatre? The only difference is that the latter is jailed every time he is caught.

The Ogden first baseman has been dubbed "He never smiles again" Douris.

The Salt Lakeers will make a mistake if they allow the interest now so effectively aroused—and Trax H. make modestly claims to have been the instrument which resuscitated it—to subside again. There should be one good game a week as long as the weather lasts.

No answer has as yet been returned to the Buttes.

Reed is one of the best left fielders who ever tripped through the grass on the Salt Lake grounds.

At the Glenview track, Cleveland, on the 12th inst., Clingstone and Guy, Mr. Gordon's team, were driven a mile in 2:17 1/2, and repeated it in 2:12. The quarters in the last heat were 21 3/4, 32 3/4, 33 3/4.

Reinswag's duties on the books as by Henry Clay. The fact is that he is a mare of unknown breeding, named Old Nellie. Dr. McLaughlin, who bred the gelding, bought Old Nellie from a pipey horse dealer for $32.50.

Among local horsemen the prevailing topic is: Will Mr. Walker start Romero at the fall meeting? A reporter put this question to Mr. Walker yesterday, and was answered that he had not yet decided either as to exhibiting him or entering him. It is certain that Mr. Baskin will not bring out India.

West has arranged for a match with the Willards to come off in this city on September 10th. This club has repeatedly defeated the Ogden, and Parsons, the Wells and Nebeker are prominent members of it; the full nine is as follows: Parsons, c., O. Wells, p., G. Wells, 2b., W. Owens, 1b., Davis, 3b., Nebeker, 1b., O. Call, 3b., Parry, c., G. Nichols, r.f.

The last meeting in New York between the leading baseball teams which represent the east and the west, took place in that city on the Polo Grounds between the Calumet and the New Yorks. An immense concourse of spectators were present. The New York papers pronounce the game the grandest exhibition of ball playing ever given in New York. The score was as follows:
New York.....0 0 1 0 0 2 4 12
